

Jerry is Mapping Community-Led Climate Solutions

Organizing Physicians and Medical Students, Community Clinics, and Street Medicine Teams for Climate Health Action

Jerry P. Abraham, MD, MPH, CMQ

So I believe that climate solutions really lie with the people that are most impacted and affected, including my patients and the people that serve alongside me in caring for communities on the front lines of the climate crisis, like in Los Angeles, where we're experiencing extreme heat, where we're dealing with wildfires, where we're dealing with a lot of uncertainty as a result of climate change.

And I'm excited to support my member action plan because I believe the solution lies in organizing health professionals, including physicians and medical students. It's also about empowering community clinics and also understanding the needs of our patients and the people providing care on the streets.

They also are very much so in tune with what solutions will work best for our communities. By working together, members of the network along with people and communities on the frontline, we really can provide solutions that will move the dial on helping us adapt, mitigate, and address the health harms of climate change.
